Do demonstrations affect lawmakers and legislation?

After the events of the last week, is Wendy Davis a viable statewide candidate for the Democrats?

- "She can be...but there's work to be done."
- "Now the question is who will show up to vote."
- "Statewide she's as viable as a terminated fetus."
- "She may be forced to run for a statewide office if she doesn't poll well in her district. She didn't win by a wide margin last time. If the voters back home don't buy into her cause, it may be bye-bye. However, the Democrats won't be able to pull off a gubernatorial win."
- "If by 'viable' you mean the D's best sacrificial lamb? Then, yes."
- "The GOP inadvertently created a New Democratic icon in Texas"
- "She fired up her base and increased her name ID, but whether she has appeal to the middle remains to be seen."
- "Does viable mean alive or with a possibility of winning? She can be a live state wide CANDIDATE but she cannot win a statewide general election."
- "Someone has to go first. If her choice is a tight race to keep her Senate seat vs. an exceedingly long-shot statewide race, it might be better for the party for her to go statewide."
- "I think Wendy Davis is a viable candidate for the Democrats, but not convinced any Democrat is yet viable in a statewide election. Time will tell."
- "Viable as a 'candidate,' - yes, but not a statewide office 'winner.' This is still a red state."
- "She is the most visible member of a party out of step with current Texas political realities. She would be a shoo-in in Massachusetts for example, but in Texas, she has had 30 minutes of fame and that is all she will get."
- "It won't happen till the Democrats get it together, but -- slowly -- demographics and GOP messing in people's personal lives will make it happen. And she's a great candidate!"
- "She should run for Lite Guv in 2014. The current crop aiming for the Lite Crown are weak. These candidates will try to out-right each other and when that occurs stupid things get recorded. Assuming that Rs have a strong 42% general base, and Ds start with a 37% base, one wrong blurb by the Republican candidate could be a game-changer."
- "If she waits a few more cycles she will be the front runner, still a red state for anyone"
- "Despite Twitter and money, the numbers are stacked against her."
- "It would be purely sacrificial! They don't have anyone else."
- "The treatment she received was the issue. People don't like bullies! The majority tried to bully her and people saw it for what it was."
- "Unless you can give me another name... (please don't say Castro!)"

- "But they'll use her anyway, thinking Texas is ready for a radical, pro-abortion candidate for a statewide position to be named later."

- "No Democrat will be viable until 2022."

- "No doubt she has the energy and charisma to lead the Party; the law of numbers simply isn't on her side."

- "Of course she is viable. She will have all the money Steve Mostyn wants to spend and would likely get more votes than Paul Sadler or Bill White. Maybe even 47% or 48% (which would be big). Can she win? No."

- "The Democrats have to get something going if they are to ever make a resurgence in Texas. But they have to do it a piece at a time. Wendy Davis is smart and will not let the exposure go to her head and push her into a suicide move. It's better for her to stand back and tell people she could have won than to get into a race that she will lose."

- "For the past dozen years Republicans have enjoyed a steady 12 to 14 point margin in statewide elections. No single event, no matter how dramatic, is going to change the basic structure of Texas politics overnight."

- "She was viable before last week. She was simply given a huge platform."

- "Texas women - Democrats and republicans alike - are TIRED of being talked down to and legislated upon! Most republican women- those who can think, reason and read - do NOT adhere to these same crazy policies to which many republican men have (sadly!) signed on! NO ONE is pro-abortion - but this policy that republicans espouse - forcing women to become mothers before they are ready, yet REMOVING any forms of assistance (healthcare, education, food stamps,) from them once they child is HERE!"

- "First of all, there was literally no one else talking about running, Second, the Anglo female profile is more viable right now than the Latino profile statewide,"

- "But with plenty of caveats: Davis needs tons of money, organization, and a fragmented opposition. She's not a very viable candidate, but she's slightly viable. I see the answer to this question as more nuanced than simply yes or no."

- "Tallest midget. I hope she does run so GOP picks up state senate seat"

- "She is the brightest, and only, hope they've had in years. And she would go down (that is, lose) as a heroine in whichever statewide race she might for. She probably won't run statewide, because she has a two-year senate term and would have to surrender her senate seat only to lose to Perry or Abbott. She's an attention hog but not stupid."

- "One trick pony's don't win. Bigger question, where was the pro-life movement during Dewey's colossal failure and where are they now. If this is important to Perry, Dewey and Patrick how come they are not leading and getting the pro-life supporters rallied against the pro-abortion movement. Where is Abbott? The ship of state (for conservatives and pro-life supporters) is adrift and without leadership. Oh I see, they are all out raising money which is obviously more important than the sanctity of life, of course."

- "The Democrats needed statewide name ID, an ability to raise money, and the appeal to crossover a segment of the Republican electorate. Check, check, and check."

- "The question of course is not clear. I don't think the "events of last week" have anything to do with it. She was already "viable" in the context of the Democrat primary. If the question relates to her electability in the general election, the answer is that she is perhaps only slightly more "electable" than any other Democrat."

- "Moneyed candidates don't always win in Texas. Issues matter."

- "Wendy Davis is viable. The question is whether or not Democrats can mobilize to the task of electing her. Imagine a Dream Team 2014 with the sole intention of GOTV in cities w votes."

- "We're jumping the gun a bit. Texas isn't ready for a statewide Democrat just yet. Give it a decade."

- "The numbers aren't there yet. Without a huge lift from a tidewater presidential year (2008) not enough Hispanics vote to pull this off. A Clinton/Castro ticket might get close."

- "She can rally her base; but she has to have cross over Republican women to win in November; and that does not appear likely right now."

- "Yes. Dems finally have a candidate with personality and a pulse. And Rs have no one to blame but themselves."

- "She can win any D primary but will lose a statewide race, barring a Claytie Williams gaffe by her R opponent."

- "Viable is much different than winnable"

- "Wendy, run...pretty please. It would be so fun.... take your stand for abortion after 20 weeks to the voters...."

- "But where are still Red State"

- "The numbers are not there. However, if the R's keep to their plan to alienate every woman and Hispanic in Texas, that could change."

- "Depends on your definition of viable. If you're asking whether she could run statewide, sure. If you're asking whether she could win, absolutely not."

- "She'd likely do worse than the last bunch of milquetoast D candidates. She'll have more fervor among her own supporters to be sure. But she'll do worse in the middle and will energize conservatives to vote against her."

- "I think she is more like the only viable statewide candidate for the Ds. Unfortunately for the Ds (and her), if she does choose to run statewide, she'll likely get beat."

- "The Republicans took the bait hook, line, and sinker."

- "No doubt, she is the Democrat best positioned to win. If any Democrat could win, it would be Ms. Davis. But alas, Texas is still a red state."

- "She should consider running for Lt. Governor instead of Governor. It is unlikely that she could beat Abbott. She has a shot at winning for Lt. Governor, especially if Dewhurst is the nominee. In the Lt. Governor's race there is at least a chance that lightning could strike, somewhat similar to when Perry and Hutchison won statewide for the first time. The electorate was shifting their way (just as is happening now in the other direction) and they both faced relatively weak candidates."

- "She will get the standard 47%"

- "Wendy Davis has all the tools, and will definitely be a viable candidate for the Ds when the state moves from bright red to purple."

- "Depends on the race, but a dream matchup for her would be Dan Patrick in the Lt. Governor race."

- "Ds in the penalty box will likely last at least another 8 years, unless the Rs do something stupid (oh wait, I just contradicted myself)."

- "Sorry, but "viable statewide candidate for the Democrats" is still an oxymoron in this state."

- "Public Education and general belief there is a "war on women" within certain factions of the Republican Party are strong issues to run on with crossover appeal."

After the events of the last week, is David Dewhurst a viable statewide candidate for the Republicans?

- "Drip, drip, drip. This man, who is already riddled with self-inflicted wounds, is now taking fire from inside the ranks. He should mount up and quietly ride off into the sunset."

- "More nails in an already closing coffin."

- "It's ok for a bill to die (like an aborted fetus, it happens all the time), but it is not cool to lose control of the Senate. Bullock is turning over in grave at that (but not the abortion issue)."

- "Dewhurst needs to retire citing that he needs to spend more time with his family and enjoy life."

- "Assumes facts not in evidence: this suggests he was viable before the events of last week."

- "It's time for David to move on with the next chapter in his life. With his assets he can do much from the private sector"

- "Even if only one other candidate was in the race, the Dew would be in trouble."

- "I think it is getting more and more difficult for the Lieutenant Governor's message to resonate, especially with the criticism he's getting on both sides of the aisle."

- "I believe he has an uphill battle on his hands."

- "He has screwed himself too many times. The far right obviously doesn't trust him. Why he continues to suck up to them instead of leading is beyond explanation!"
- "The Dew us Dead! Long Live The Dew! He should exit gracefully. In doing so, everyone would be forced to acknowledge he was a great conservative."
- "Only in a general election, we are still a red state."
- "Depends on what happens in the special. If it passes, will be old news."
- "Stick a fork in the "Dew"-he's finished! The campaign consultants are going to suck up plenty of his money as he tries to prove otherwise."
- "He should have stayed at the restaurant."
- "He's toast. First Cruz, then Barfield, now this fiasco. He won't even make the run-off."
- "Best wishes on relaxing retirement."
- "No. He's done. Who is going to tell him?"
- "David Dewhurst showed that the King has no clothes. Rather than get wiped out, he should retire as Lt. Governor and move on."
- "Blaming Dewhurst for the filibuster debacle is unfair. Perry introduced the abortion issue late and then the House dithered, getting it to the Senate late enough that a filibuster could run out the clock. Unfair though it may be, Dewhurst is cooked."
- "He is dead man walking in a Republican primary."
- "Dewhurst wasn't a viable statewide candidate after his last primary."
- "He's an open target as Staples and Patrick have already come after him for failing to maintain order on the Senate Floor."
- "He was not viable even before last week. Right wingers don't trust him because he's not as crazy as they are."
- "Had such hopes for him - he was reasonable, intelligent; loved Texas and wanted to do good for the state and its people. Now, he just wants to get re-elected! VERY sad to witness the de-evolution of a person who could have been a true shining example of "good" Texas statesman. Now, he is just another bumbling politician."
- "Dead man walking. Doubt he makes a primary runoff for Lt. Gov."
- "He's more viable statewide than he is in the Republican primary."
- "Cannot win a runoff. Has never been politically weaker"
- "He was done when Cruz beat him, and now he's overdone."
- "Get the keys out and start singing hey hey hey good bye! It is the Todd and Jerry show now."
- "HaHaHaHa."
- "Nothing as cold as ashes after the fire is gone (Pete Townsend or Willie Nelson) and the Dew looked ashen."

- "The "events of last week" will certainly have a negative impact on Dewhurst's primary chances, but I don't think the "events" will be determinative. I think he was already unelectable."
- "Dewhurst ordered the gallery cleared at 10 pm. Troopers needed reinforcements because of the unruly crowd. I know; I was there."
- "Pack it up, Dew. When you're intimidated by some shouting and feel the need to threaten the media with arrest and ignore the most basic fundamentals of the process, you - my good sir - have lost control."
- "His career is over. Robert Duncan may want to look at his resume, too-- as should the parliamentarian."
- "Dewhurst is finished."
- "The Railroad Commission beckons"
- "If his primary opponents split the tea party vote there is a path for Dewhurst, the worst senate presiding officer in modern Texas history. What an embarrassment. Clown moves - attack the media and bust old ladies. What's next? Thumb sucking?"
- "Viable, but weaker...."
- "With his checkbook, he's always viable."
- "Dewhurst finally showed himself to be as ineffective as many people believed him to be. He will show up for second special session - but such leadership will be showing up late (another Dewhurst trademark)."
- "Its not clear that he can win a Republican primary. He loses on conservatism and competence."
- "Seriously, dude needs to retire to a dude ranch."
- "Did I miss something was he before?"
- "I am not sure he was before last week. His overall performance since the senate race has gone steadily down hill."
- "Can he run? Yes. Can he win? No."
- "Depends upon a) his getting his act together in the second special, and b) how his opponents shape up. Dan Patrick is no Ted Cruz!"
- "What a mess. He ingloriously served up campaign fodder for his primary opponents and every Democrat in the state. He should ask himself ever day: What would Bob Bullock do? And where is Big Daddy when you need him?"
- "What you witnessed was the true David Dewhurst. He's been the joke ever since he arrived in Austin."
- "He was toast before June 25. Now he's burnt toast."
- "He remains viable because he is the incumbent and can self-fund, but there is no doubt that he is greatly weakened from the events of last week."
- "That goose was cooked before this debacle. He won't even make the runoff."

- "$$$ makes the world go round. Not sure how much the Dew is willing to spend to try and keep his seat."

- "Dew is toast, as in burned"

- "Only if "viable" means finishing fourth in a four-man race."

Do you think the demonstrations at the end of the first special session will develop into something bigger in politics or was that a one-time thing?

- "More Fundraising and voter registration activity for both sides."

be a repeat of the rally, but this time the supporters will lose."

- "Moveon.org needs something to do, right?"

- "They've certainly got their base fired up."

- "The media wanted to make it so; however, Texas is still the reddest of the big states."

- "House has never allowed demonstrations at any level. Senate has learned its lesson. By the way, Duncan was in the Chair when things went south."

- "This was not a tree falling in the forest. The whole world was watching."

- "This may have energized a group if people who were probably already Democrat Primary voters. It will help Texas Democrats raise money that they have not raised previously."

- "Not a game-changer statewide, but certainly an important event for lots of individuals who will stay active in a future."

- "No. The news was how badly the Republicans handled this issue, not that Texas has suddenly lurched to the left and now supports abortion on demand, gun control or shutting down oil production to stop climate change. Because the Democrats in the Lege are who they are, there's never been much need for the Republican leadership to think strategically. Now there is."

- "I suppose it could materialize into something bigger, just not sure what "bigger" means."

- "What an embarrassing spectacle. My goodness! I hope that was a one-time thing."

- "We are witnessing the beginning of social media democracy in Texas. What comes next? A few punches and arrests here and there all caught via smartphones. I can hear Evan Smith starting off TT's featured video with, "Let's Get Ready to RUMBLE!"

- "Democrats have been trying to re-live the 60s for years. They will try again to recreate what happened at the end of the special session 1, but it will not happen. If they try it will turn into something that they don't want and the people of Texas reject."

- "I would have checked 'two-time thing' if I had that option. There will

- "It's a one time thing, though it might provide fuel to the long-range party building efforts of Democrats in Texas. Still, party building requires long steady effort."

- "Hopefully, DPS will be better equipped to deal with these kinds of outbursts. This does nothing to help the democratic process and was an outrage."

- "The GOP had two choices after last November's elections -- read the memo about a kinder, gentler GOP or double-down and go even "more conservative." After a kinder, gentler regular session, the "double down" faction has taken over. That is a BIG, BIG mistake. The GOP is on its way out because it can't stop itself (and the poisonous social issue faction) from swallowing its own poison pill."

- "I'll say a one-time thing but it all depends if they choose to make it into something bigger."

- "It will be difficult for the D's to keep the momentum going for a long period, but if the R's keep making tactical errors, anything is possible."

- "People are waking up and realizing that elections have consequences and over the last few cycles in Texas those elections have been extremely detrimental to women in Texas!"

- "While I do not believe they were a "one-time" thing, I also, do not believe it was spontaneous or organic. I think it was supported with a lot of forethought and money."

- "Again, one trick pony. The pro-life movement is already winning this war because science is on their side."

Look at a picture of your kid's 18 month sonogram and tell me that isn't a child."

- "Democrats needed to believe again. We needed someone to grow a pair and show they were tired of being bulldozed. It already is bigger. The 2nd Special will only fuel the fire."

- "There will be more but the spontaneous drama is past."

- "Alinsky rules are evil. Evil knows no bounds."

- "The anger is growing. We had a Special Session in 2011 on the cuts to public schools - also tripped by a Wendy Davis filibuster. Texas Republicans have marginalized themselves by not empowering the extremists, but allowing them to coopt the levers of control. They've been smart on immigration (mostly) but just can't let abortion go. So continues the downward spiral for Texas Republicans. What's most surprising is the seeming willingness to press the accelerator."

- "This was NOT an "unruly mob." These are people who have finally had it with being dismissed, and this won't be the end of it. In fact, characterizing this as a riot is even going to backfire on the Republicans--very insulting. Look "riot" up in the dictionary--the implication is property damage or personal injury. None of that occurred."

- "I think it has some legs, but fiscal conservatives are a seemingly shrinking part of the republican primary. The culture wars will eventually usher Democrats back to statewide office."

- "There's an ebb and flow to these things. The demonstrations will grow so long as people think they have some ability to influence policy with them."

- "Gives Ds something they haven't had in a while - energy and hope. But can that enthusiasm be sustained? I'll believe it when I see it."

- "There are very few, if any issue, like abortion to engage and enrage the public."

- "Something bigger indeed - will expose the radical occupy nut jobs the Obama organizers are relying on to "turn Texas blue.""

- "I bet even the food trailers will be there this time."

- "Only during the second special session."

- "Yes and no. Like Occupy the people who do it enjoy it. But, also like Occupy, it rarely changes anything, which makes it hard to sustain."

- "Looks like the Ds are trying to recreate the demonstrations that went on in Wisconsin a couple of years ago. Good luck. I don't think the leadership or DPS are going to let things get out of hand like that again."

- "Women will remember in November."

- "Remember that staple of weekend sports TV "Wide World of Sports"? The pro-abortion crowd is about to have their "agony of defeat" moment."

- "Does anyone believe the leadership will allow that to go on again?"

- "Hard to maintain the momentum long-term"

- "By Labor Day, this will all be a distant memory."

Do demonstrations like the one at the end of the first special session — no matter what side they come from — have any impact on lawmakers and legislation?

- "Elected officials pay attention to head count."

- "Minds are made up, such action only steels their resolve."

- "The Democrats are energized. We'll see if the momentum continues."

- "The only significant impact is that it keeps the legislators from their day jobs for another 30 days."

- "But it's good theater"

- "They have an impact on voters, given national media attention."

- "Certainly energized the long-passive Ds."

- "They should have an impact! The partisanship on both sides of the aisle is bringing lots of passionate citizens out, and they're wanting to be part of the process, and they're wanting their voices to be heard."

- "Absolutely not. Shows such as that are no indication of what the majority of the population wants. It's simply an indication of how one side or the other can use social media to muster a mob."

- "Such demonstrations cement each side more firmly eliminating any chance of compromise since it now becomes about the optics."

- "Unfortunately, last week galvanized the jerks who think they should tell women what to do with their own health decisions."

- "They create a certain perception and strike fear in the eyes of all electeds."

- "If it disrupts the process, yes. Not just showing up in the gallery, people have been doing that forever."

- "Obviously this one did but that is because the Lt Gov let it. Generally, rule of law should prevail over mob rule."

- "Clearly. It killed 3 pieces of legislation and here we are for Round 2."

- "There are some who should take pause and consider what this could mean in the next election. God forbid some woman dies because her access to a safe abortion has been hindered!"

- "There were hundreds of demonstrations on both sides (or it seemed like hundreds) in front of the Capitol this year, and none of them made much difference. We have left wing occupy mobs and we have right wing tea party mobs. Our legislators are elected by one of these mobs or the other and are already polarized into their respective camps. A pro or anti abortion, gun, teachers union or whatever demonstration doesn't move anyone. This demonstration would have had no impact if Dewhurst and the GOP had simply exercised some leadership. Since they failed at that, they could have, at a minimum, shut it down and cleared the gallery. They won't make that mistake again."

- "Demonstrations have an impact on legislators but they make the average Texan uncomfortable (Unless it is about guns)."

- "It's always about the people; the legislators have forgotten that and act as if they are above reproach. A day of reckoning is coming..."

- "Politicians are wired to placate the masses directly in front of them."

- "Makes the majority dig in their heels--firmly."

- "Moderate lawmakers will realize the extreme positions they have been forced to take over the years are no longer popular."

- "More on lawmakers than legislation. SB 5, unless the two-thirds rule is enacted in the Senate, is likely to pass. But the fact that Sen. Eltife filed the blocker bill, Straus' public rebuke of Perry suggest some unease among Republican members."

- "They only come from an emotional side, not from a logical side."

- "Except for a few local delegation members law makers don't look at the demonstrators and see their voters."
- "Vote was 94 and 19 and will be again"
- "Members get terrified whenever commoners storm the Bastille. Heads may roll."
- "People are weak and want to be liked. Our culture is breeding weakness into it more and more so people are spineless and will give into this type of nonsense. Hello, these are politicians you know."
- "The evidence proves that it does, in fact."
- "Bright light shows weakness."
- "Participatory democracy assumes participation. It's encouraging to see the interest now but where were all these folks during the Regular Session when - say - funding for family planning was being discussed? One story not being reported by the media is the growing success of Texas progressives. An element of that is the ability to turn out large numbers of people. Remember last session's big and/or loud demonstrations concerning cuts to public schools? $3.4 billion of $5.4 billion cut in 2011 was restored in 2013. Not perfect but not shabby either."
- "Split decision. Impact on lawmakers - the finely tuned weather vanes of our society. Much less impact on legislation, nobody knows what in the bills. I think I just became a Femacrat."
- "Depending on where you are in time and space, they can have either a positive or negative impact. But they have an impact."
- "More political theater than impact. Strong leadership would never have allowed it to be a factor."
- "They make great memories-Killer Bs, Ardmore... but it is 2 years and another election cycle and it is unlikely the composition of the House and Senate will change substantially."
- "Sure, all one has to do is watch the faces of the senators during the filibuster night"
- "Depending on their personal beliefs, they either loved it or they hated it. But I'm betting none of them are thrilled about coming back this week."
- "Rarely."
- "Only to the extent that elected officials try to ride the wave. Those that are guided by principle will be unaffected."
- "But they will have an effect in the 2014 elections."
- "There isn't a politician in Texas that doesn't know which side of the "life issue" they are on."
- "The votes are the same no matter what - there are no fence sitters"
- "I suppose not being able to hear what's going on does indeed have an impact?"
- "They do sometimes, but probably won't in this case"

- "1,000 angry protesters out of a sea of 26 million people, literally a drop in the bucket."

- "Yes--they lead to greater polarization and less good public policy."
